SAYS WARSHIP AUDACIOUS WAS SAVED; IS BACK IN COMMISSION

That the great British warship Audacious is back in commission is the declaration of the New York Herald of February 15. The Herald tells the Audacious story as follows:

The Audacious, one of Great Britain's finest and most powerful battle ships of the superdreadnought class, will rejoin the Grand Fleet next week. She will leave the shipyards of Harland & Wolff, Belfast, on Monday without a flaw in her hull or armament. Such was the information contained in advices received yesterday in New York by the Herald.

The mighty first line war vessel of the Royal Navy did not rise like Venus from the sea, as might be supposed from the reiterated reports of her destruction off the North Irish coast on October 27, last.

In the light of the news received here yesterday, the Audacious, although badly crippled either by a German torpedo or mine, was not sunk. With her wounded hull bound in collision mats and the gaping hole below the water line adequately plugged, she remained afloat and was safely guided into drydock several hours in the wake of the Olympic of the White Star line, which put about in response to the battle ship's radio signal of distress.

In conformity with the policy pursued by the British authorities regarding the disaster, however, no information relating to the recommissioning of the Audacious will be published in the United Kingdom. That official silence which has been rigorously observed by the Admiralty since the news of the disaster first became noised abroad will be maintained, and the British public will learn of the dreadnought's reappearance in the fleet only in the event of her participating in an engagement or after the war is ended.

When the Audacious appeared to be foundering following the explosion which rent her keel a swift inventory of the damage wrought was made by the engineers on board and also by experts from other naval craft which soon were alongside. At first it was believed that the great fighting ship was doomed.

Saved by Collision Mats.

Almost before the echoes of the tremendous explosion had died away the collision mats were overboard and lashed over the hole left by the explosive. Meanwhile sandbags were piled into the ragged aperture from within, and, with the elaborate system of bulkheads, the tremendous inflow of water was practically shut off.

By this time, of course, the great vessel had shipped an enormous quantity of water through her torn bottom and was very low in the sea. It was in this condition that the photographs were made that depicted her in what was believed to be a sinking condition.

It at first was decided to tow the wounded battle ship into the Balld shipbuilding yards at Birkenhead, a suburb of Liverpool on the other side of the Mersey. From Lough Swilly, on the Irish coast, where the disaster occurred, to Birkenhead, however, is a run of 190 miles.

The crippled condition of the Audacious, upon later consideration, was believed to be too serious to permit of such a run, especially as at that time the British government was said to be investigating reports that the Germans were operating from a cleverly concealed submarine base in the Shetland islands, off the northern coast of Scotland.

It was accordingly decided to tow the vessel into Belfast, 140 miles nearer, being about 50 miles from the mouth of Lough Swilly. This relieved the cruiser squadron which escorted the Audacious from encountering further hazards from hostile submarines.

It is believed that of her crew of 1000 men, few were killed or injured by the explosion on board the Audacious. Those who were not taken from the vessel by the boats of the cruiser Liverpool and smaller British war craft which stood in close to the dreadnought after she showed signs of distress, were taken off in the Olympic's boats and those of the battle ship herself.

A sufficient number of the battle ship's company, however, was left on board to keep fast the water resisting collision mats and sand bags. Experts from the shipyards were hurried on board and had already taken steps to remedy the injury before the vessel was cradled on the blocks of the drydock.

Work Night and Day Repairing Damage.

The course from the scene of the disaster to Belfast was shaped somewhat slowly, as the towing of such a monstrous ship was a matter of considerable difficulty even were she not so badly crippled. Great care had to be observed at all times to guard against the possibility of the immense vessel turning turtle, which would not only end her own career, but seriously jeopardize the safety of her escort.

Since she was run into drydock, a small army of mechanics and workmen have been busy night and day repairing the damage wrought by the torpedo or mine, and these men, like the Olympic's passengers, who remained true to their pledge of secrecy alleged to have been exacted by the British authorities in the matter of the disaster, have maintained a strict silence.

Now the Audacious is complete in every detail, even as on that day in the spring of 1913, when she steamed forth on her first trial trip. Had the vessel been lost it would have been the most costly disaster to British naval arms, so far as battle efficiency is concerned, during the present conflict. She is of the King George V class, provided for in the naval estimates of 1910-11. This class is the third most powerful in tonnage and armament in the British navy.

The Audacious' high guns are so mounted that she can bring to bear a broadside of ten 13.5-inch guns, while in pursuing or retreating from an enemy four of the big guns can be trained either ahead or astern.

The Audacious is 596 feet long, with a beam of 89 feet. Her displacement is 25,000 tons and her speed is believed to be 22.5 knots. She was completed at a cost of $9,800,000. Her powerful main battery consists of ten 13.5-inch guns, four in turrets forward, four aft and two amidships. She also carries 16 4-inch guns and two submerged 21-inch broadside torpedo tubes and one at the stern. Her main armor belt is 13 inches thick and her upper belt from seven to nine inches in thickness.

SENATE WANTS TO CUT ITS PRINTING BILLS

In the interest of economy the senate authorized its printing committee yesterday to administer a gentle rebuke to the official printer. Senator Wertz raised the point by a strenuous protest when the holdover educational committee report appeared in printed form. He objected to the spacing and declared that in its form as an engrossed bill, the cost of paper and printing was increased about one-third. He noticed the governor's message No. 6 had come from the printer in the same form. He didn't blame the committee but thought it an error on the part of the printer.

Penhallow remarked that the educational committee's original report was not triple-spaced, so the printer had not received his erroneous idea from it. President Chillingworth advised the printing committee to set correct the printer hereafter to set committee reports in solid form.

The Hawaii select committee recommended that senate bill No. 7, prescribing the powers of the chairman of the Hawaii county supervisors, be tabled and a substitute measure, offered by the committee, be accepted. The report was adopted and the substitute, known as S. B. No. 27, passed first reading. The new one prescribes also the duties of other Hawaii county officials.

One of the features of the early afternoon session was the reading of a resolution from the Hawaii county supervisors asking that the appropriation for the reclamation of Waiolama swamp, in the Crescent City, be increased from $50,000 to $225,000. It brought a gasp from several quarters. The resolution was referred to the Hawaii select committee.

House concurrent resolution No. 8, instructing Superintendent Kinney to prepare a course of study in business and commercial work for the Lahaina luncheon seminary on Maui, was read and referred to the educational committee.

Four new bills in addition to the one already mentioned were introduced. Three were by S. L. Desha and one by Robinson.

It is reported that a rich deposit of gold has been discovered on the banks of the Binabur river, province of Mindoro, Philippine islands.

DIVORCED FOR 5 YEARS, HUSBAND DIDN'T KNOW

Evidently without his knowledge, Pakoma, a former luna on the Hana plantation on Maui, was divorced by his wife, Mary Pakoma in 1910, though she continued to live with him two years after receiving the decree from Circuit Judge Robinson, finally leaving him and resuming her maiden name in 1912.

Pakoma discovered this peculiar state of affairs only yesterday when his own suit against her alleging desertion was continued. The husband's memory, or that of the wife is bad, for the wife in her petition asserted they had been married in 1903, while Pakoma in his petition averred they were united in matrimony in 1908.

MARRIAGE LICENSES.

Marriage licenses recently granted include the following: John W. Keola, Hawaiian, 22 years old, and Miss Matilda Flager, Portuguese, 19 years of age; John Caspina, Portuguese, 20, and Miss Martha Kalama, Hawaiian, 17; Albert George Kaiser, American, 38, and Mrs. Eliza H.
